This war, like all wars, must have an end, and the selection has to be made between the Government of our Fathers or a Monarchy even worse than that from which our Fathers emaneipated themselves. It would be infidelity to liberty to doubt how the people will choose. Before this final adjustment takes place, two revolutions in the opinions of men will occur. The Abolitionist of the North will have to be put aside, and the Fire eater of the South will have to abjure his heresy. These twin allies and conspirators against the welfare of the people will have to give way before the majestic march of the CONSERVATIVE PRINCIPLE which, while it restores, will regenerate; and E Pluribus Unum will again be the motto of America-the stars and stripes, like the blazonry of the empyrean, will float again over the sea and over the land "a
